Foreword

In both parts of Ireland education faces the challenge and opportunity of integrating increasing numbers of pupils whose mother tongue is neither English nor Irish. The two jurisdictions have adopted different approaches to the development of such pupils' proficiency in English as the language of education. The whole island faces the challenge of creating an inclusive school culture: one that not only welcomes children whose language is not English, and whose culture and ethnicity are not Irish, but turns linguistic, cultural and ethnic diversity to the educational advantage of all. This Pre-school Toolkit for Diversity has been adapted in recognition of a specific need to provide guidance and support in pre-school education. A consultative group was established to adapt the Toolkit for Diversity in the Primary School. This group of early years practitioners acknowledged its relevance to the nursery context but in its adaptation wished to address the specific needs of the integration of newcomer children specifically in the pre-school setting.

The book has four sections. The first, Getting ready, addresses the preliminary issues that any school must deal with if it is to be genuinely welcoming and inclusive. The second section, Early days, is concerned with the first steps towards the integration of pupils from other countries, cultures and ethnicities; inevitably the focus is very much on language and the need to develop classroom communication and a classroom environment capable of responding to new linguistic and cultural challenges. The third and fourth sections, Moving on and What next?, respond to the fact that inclusiveness is a never-ending process.

Throughout its development the book has been informed by regular consultation with teachers. Every effort has been made to ensure that the book takes account of the variety of challenges faced by education depending on the location of schools (urban or rural) and the number of pupils from migrant backgrounds they are dealing with. The book draws together a body of experience accumulated throughout Ireland. It is also informed by up-to-date research and reflects what has come to be recognized as best international practice. Perhaps the most important thing to emphasise in this regard is that the activities in the book will benefit all pupils equally, whatever their origin.

Beacons at Bealtaine

Phoenix Park, May Day 2004

Uisce: water. And fionn: the water's clear.
But dip and find this Gaelic water Greek:
A phoenix flames upon fionn uisce here.

Strangers were barbaroi to the Greek ear.
Now let the heirs of all who could not speak
The language, whose ba-babbling was unclear,

Come with their gift of tongues past each frontier
And find the answering voices that they seek
As fionn and uisce answer phoenix here.

The May Day hills were burning, far and near,
When our land's first footers beached boats in the creek
In uisce, fionn, strange words that soon grew clear;

So on a day when newcomers appear
Let it be a homecoming and let us speak
The unstrange word, as it behoves us here,

Move lips, move minds and make new meanings flare
Like ancient beacons signalling, peak to peak,
From middle sea to north sea, shining clear
As phoenix flame upon fionn uisce here.

In the Celtic calendar that once regulated the seasons in many parts of Europe, May Day, known in Irish as Bealtaine, was the feast of bright fire, the first of summer, one of the four great quarter days of the year. The early Irish Leabhar Gabhála (The Book of Invasions), tells us that the first magical inhabitants of the country, the Tuatha Dé Danaan, arrived on the feast of Bealtaine, and a ninth-century text indicates that on the same day the druids drove flocks out to pasture between two bonfires. So there is something auspicious about the fact that a new flocking together of the old European nations happens on this day of mythic arrival in Ireland; and it is even more auspicious that we celebrate it in a park named after the mythic bird that represents the possibility of ongoing renewal. But there are those who say that the name Phoenix Park is derived from the Irish words, fionn uisce, meaning 'clear water', and that coincidence of language gave me the idea for this poem. It's what the poet Horace might have called a carmen saeculare, a poem to salute and celebrate a historic turn in the saeculum, the age.

How to use this toolkit

Organisation

The toolkit is organised chronologically from Getting ready through Early days and Moving on ending with What next?. It is recommended, however, that teachers/leaders familiarise themselves with the entire book as many activities are revisited and developed at different stages.

Each section is colour coded.

Terminology used

Home language is used throughout to refer to the mother tongue or first language of the child. It is the case that many children will already know more than one language.

Pre-school Education refers to educational provision for children prior to primary school. In some instances some children may have an additional year in pre-school education.

Newcomer is used to refer to those parents and children whose mother tongue is not English. It is acknowledged that, increasingly, non-English speaking children entering school may have been born in Ireland. Nonetheless, the term newcomer reflects the challenge facing parents and children from different language and cultural backgrounds in accessing and entering pre-school education in a new country.

Interpreter refers to the use of a third party to provide oral interpretation in an interview or meeting.

Translator refers to the use of a native speaker or person who is fluent in the language in question to translate written documents, letters, notices and so on.

Common European Framework of Reference for Languages (CEFR) is a tool for describing language use and language learning. It is built on descriptions of Listening, Speaking, Reading and Writing.

Photocopying

Principals and teachers in schools throughout Ireland may photocopy pages from this toolkit as necessary. Other users must seek the publisher's permission to reproduce any part of the book.

Providing a welcoming environment

Welcome display

A welcome display is inviting. It sends out a clear signal that the pre-school setting invites and respects all languages and cultures. A suitable display makes visitors aware of the pre-school ethos and respect for diversity.

Suggestions for displays:

- People you will meet
- Photos of various children
- Welcome captions in different languages
- Parent notice board

Parent notice board

It is a good idea to have a parent notice board with relevant information about the pre-school setting and the local community

- Newsletters
- Holiday list and forthcoming events
- Churches
- Health centre
- Citizens Advice Bureau
- Library
- Community centre
- Information from local schools
- General parenting advice
- Local community groups
- Information about ESOL classes*

* ESOL: English for speakers of other languages

Induction booklet

An induction booklet such as the one below may be useful in finding out about the new child.

You may wish to use an interpreter to explain the booklet during the initial meeting with parents. See pages 20-21.

The image shows three overlapping 'All about me' induction booklets. The top-left booklet is titled 'All about me' and 'My family'. It includes a drawing of four children and a 'Please write' speech bubble. The middle booklet is titled 'All about me' and 'My favourite things'. It includes drawings of a boy and a girl, and icons for a gift, a book, a game, a football, and a flower. The bottom-right booklet is titled 'All about me' and 'What makes me special'. It includes a drawing of a girl and a smiling face icon.

Welcome book

A Welcome Book provides a highly visual means of communicating pre-school information with a minimum of educational jargon. A Welcome Book is a visual version of the pre-school prospectus, providing parents with a pictorial overview of the pre-school, including

- Pre-school day (times)
- People and places in the pre-school
- What is needed for pre-school
- Snack/dinner routines
- Caring for each other

Information on the educational systems may be found on the websites of the Education (N.I) and the department of Education and Science (RoI) and reference to either of these may be included in the Welcome Book.

Website/Power Point Welcome

A useful alternative to a welcome book is a PowerPoint presentation. The contents are similar. A PowerPoint is easy to create and has the capacity to include short video sequences to support explanations.

If copied onto a CD Rom, it can be taken home to view, sent to families abroad, transferred to a school website, or used for parent meetings.

Another possibility is a welcome video.

Signs, labels and displays

Multilingual signs and displays speak volumes to a new family, particularly when they can identify their own language. A welcome sign on the front door is particularly inviting.

You may wish to ask parents to help provide translations of some signs.

It is not advisable to use on-line translation websites as they often give inaccurate translations. Using the wrong word can create serious difficulties (and embarrassment!).

The above labels are available at www.schooljinks.co.uk

Staff involvement

To ensure that all staff are fully prepared for the arrival of new children, the following supporting actions should be carried out within the pre-school.

- Deciding on first point of contact for parents/carers
- Preparing pre-school helpers
- Interviewing parents/carers
- Managing and disseminating information about new children
- Organising suitable resources
- Contributing to a welcoming environment
- Monitoring induction

Who can be involved?

Although duties and responsibilities vary in every pre-school context, it is important that roles should be clearly defined and understood by all. All staff should be fully equipped to meet the needs of newcomer children. Expertise and examples of good practice should be shared where possible. The list below reflects the broad range of personnel who can support the overall process.

- Principal/group leader
- Senior management team where appropriate
- Coordinator
- Teaching staff/assistants/pre-school leaders
- Classroom Assistant
- Helpers
- Home-school liaison teacher
- Secretary
- Board of Management/Board of Governors
- Caretaker/janitor
- Volunteer helper

It is important to recognise that children new to English have language difficulties that should be temporary and therefore require different approaches to those employed for SEN.

Staff involvement and the induction process

You may find this form useful for organising the induction process.

	What to do	Who	Review date
Prior to interview	Confirm an interview appointment
	Gather basic information
	Identify possible interpreter
	Prepare interview
Admission interview	Lead parent interview and gather detailed information
After interview	Communicate interview information to key staff
	Prepare children for new arrival
	Set up a meeting to support class teacher/leader (with language and cultural information and resources)
	Prepare suitable resources (labels, visual timetables, etc.)
	Set up and maintain welcome display
	Make Welcome Book/video/CD
	Connect newly-arrived families with the existing community where possible

* Remind all children how it feels to be new and discuss how they can help. Practise saying 'hello' in a new language.

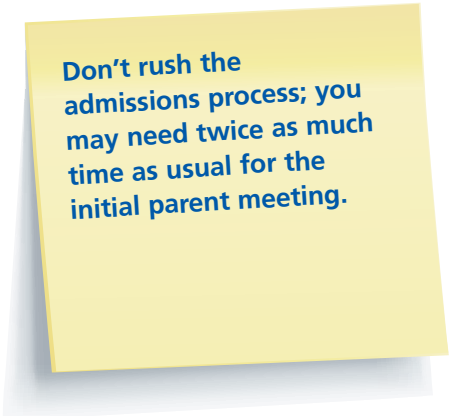

Admissions

Starting pre-school can be a daunting prospect for any child. The impact is particularly significant for children facing induction into a new country, a new culture and a new language. Welcoming and inducting a child into pre-school should be considered in the wider context of the setting's provision. Procedures to ensure effective communication with families are essential.

It is the responsibility of all staff to ensure that children and their parents are welcomed, informed and supported. It is important that everyone is clear about his/her role.

The key is not to rush the admissions process. Take time to ensure that staff are prepared and information is communicated effectively.

Don't rush the admissions process; you may need twice as much time as usual for the initial parent meeting.

First contact

At first contact, effective welcoming procedures include:

1. Setting a date for interview and informing parents (appointment card or invitation card)
2. Determining whether parents require the assistance of an interpreter
3. Gathering basic details on child (name, address and age) to pass on to principal and class teacher.
4. Offering a Welcome Book or prospectus
5. Supporting the procedure with a checklist for admissions.

It is better to conduct the initial parent meeting at a later stage, when staff have had more time to prepare.

Appointment

An Appointment Card or invitation card is an effective way to prepare the parents for the admissions interview. See the following page.

Things to consider:

- Do the parents/carers have/need access to somebody who will interpret for them?
- Do you need to contact an interpreting service to check availability of a professional interpreter? (Make the call while parents/carers are there.)
- Do you have a regular time in the week to conduct parent/carer interviews?

Interpreters

If there is a language barrier, an interpreter may be essential in order to gather vital information about the prospective child.

It is true that basic information can be communicated to parents without interpretation. However, for a pre-school to fully support its children, more detailed background information is required. Use of an interpreter can help avoid potential misunderstandings between nursery and home, and also serves to reassure parents that the nursery cares about their child. Interpreters may be available from different sources:

- The community (inexpensive and available quickly)
- Through local workplaces
- A contracted interpreter (more expensive but more reliable, accurate and professional). Remember to include the cost of travel time in your calculations of cost.

Contact the Inclusion and Diversity Service for interpreter guidance.

Interpreting friends or relatives understand and are able to communicate the parents' specific needs. However, for confidential matters and accuracy, it may be preferable to use a professional interpreter.

Using children as interpreters is not to be encouraged as it places them under pressure and may involve them in dealing with personal, sensitive or confidential matters.

Initial meeting with parents

What is the purpose of the initial meeting for newcomer families?

A detailed meeting with parents, prior to their child starting pre-school, is essential because:

- The parents often have little or no knowledge about the education system and require more information.
- Parents' expectations of education will be based on their own school experiences and may vary considerably.
- Differences in food, the classroom environment and general school routines are particular examples of where misunderstandings may occur.

What information do parents/carers require from school?

Nothing can be taken for granted. The majority of newcomer parents/carers will not understand our education system fully, including the routines and procedures in our pre-schools. So, what do they need to know?

- The education system
- Details about pre-school:
 - The daily routine
 - Key people
 - What children need
 - Rules and procedures
 - Expectations of the pre-school setting
 - The pre-school curriculum
 - Book club/library
 - How the pre-school will communicate with them
 - Positive parenting
 - Holidays and special events
 (Talk through the Welcome Book)
- Information about local community groups and interpreters

Sensitivity is essential when gathering information from parents. It is important to emphasise that all information will be treated confidentially and is required to cater for the child's needs more effectively.

What information is required from parents?

Background information on family, home circumstances in the country of origin and languages is needed in order to cater properly for a child's emotional well-being.

It is best to get this information early, rather than to discover it piecemeal (which, in turn, can contribute to staff anxiety).

Suggestions for the initial meeting

The following questions/suggestions are to guide staff through the initial meeting.

The pre-school may wish to adapt the standard school data capture form to include additional information.

For a more detailed data capture form see the CD.

Name of child		(phonetic spelling)
Parents' / carers' names
Country of origin:	Father	Mother
What name do you use for your child?
Where was your child born?
How long has your family lived in this country?

Do you speak any other languages in your family?
What languages does your child speak with other people?
Does your child like books?
Who, besides you, does your child spend time with?		<input type="checkbox"/> Brothers and sisters <input type="checkbox"/> Other children <input type="checkbox"/> Other family members <input type="checkbox"/> Other
Do you belong to a particular religious group?
Is there food that your child is not allowed to eat?
Does your child have any of the following health problems?		<input type="checkbox"/> allergies <input type="checkbox"/> asthma <input type="checkbox"/> epilepsy <input type="checkbox"/> anaemia <input type="checkbox"/> can't hear well <input type="checkbox"/> can't see well <input type="checkbox"/> can't speak well <input type="checkbox"/> can't sleep well <input type="checkbox"/> other
Does your child take any medicine regularly?

In your family, is going to school very important, important, not important?
What do you hope for your child?

Other suggestions:

- Take parents on a tour of the pre-school and introduce key people
- Allow parents/carers to observe part of the session (if possible and time permits)
- Explain how the pre-school communicates with parents. Show the visual letters and explain their purpose.

Some parents/carers are reluctant to attend meetings with staff because they feel that they do not have enough fluency in English. Such meetings may not have been a typical feature of education in their home country. It is important to explain the purpose of these meetings and to indicate if interpreters may be available.

Another possibility is to make a small card (credit card size) with the following details:

- Name of pre-school
- Pre-school address
- Pre-school telephone number
- Principal's name

Parents can keep this card for quick reference.

Pre-school calendar

A calendar indicating holidays and other closures at a glance can be very useful. This could be attached to the back of the welcome book. It is important to talk through the yearly cycle.

A 'Welcome' or 'Hello' poster in different languages gives a clear message to parents that other languages and cultures are valued in this pre-school setting.

The children can practise saying the words, and new arrivals can teach their friends how to greet in their own languages.

If the new children's language is not represented, it should be added by writing it on the poster or using a sticker.

Welcome posters and displays
(see CD for some useful translations of words and phrases)

Displays about the children in the class are a quick and fun way of introducing the class to new arrivals.

When new arrivals feel more confident, they should be encouraged to add to the display.

As the year progresses, additions may be made by pupils. This is an excellent way of recording the events of the year and creating a sense of community and belonging.

The intercultural pre-school setting: ideas

1. Use posters and visual aids reflecting children from different cultures.
2. Include books showing people and places from all around the world as well as folktales from other countries and books in other languages.
3. Have skin tone crayons and markers available.
4. Put skin tone paints at the easel.
5. In the dramatic play area have dolls with different skin tones and multicultural clothes for both the dolls and the children.
6. In the dramatic play area include cooking utensils and different food types and packages.
7. At the jigsaw table have puzzles reflecting different cultures.
8. Different ethnic family dolls which can also be used at the block area.
9. Use borders reflecting different cultures.
10. Use musical instruments from around the world.
11. Display objects of interest e.g. pieces of pottery, animals or fabric from other countries.
12. Celebrate festivals from other countries.
13. Introduce food from around the world at the snack table.
14. Display a welcome sign in a variety of languages in the hallway.
15. Make collages to stimulate multicultural awareness.
16. Display samples of different types of writing in different languages.
17. At story time invite a newcomer parent to read to the children or talk to the children about the country that they come from.
18. Allow opportunities to listen to music from around the world and stories in the children's home language.
19. At circle time use puppets reflecting cultural diversity.
20. Invite newcomer parents/carers/other to get involved in family member projects.

Becoming familiar with routines

Visual cues

Visual cues are a helpful way of making routines and activities clear to all pupils and parents. They may be used with newcomer children to make them understand choices.

Weather teddy bear

A weather teddy bear can be used regularly to model language relating to days of the week, weather and clothes. Change the bear's clothes as the weather changes.

Pre-school areas

Labels

Labels help children new to English in navigating their way around the classroom. For children in this stage of development you may wish to use real objects or photographs of the objects.

Quiet area

All pre-school settings will have a quiet room or a quiet area. A new child may find it useful to take a short break from classroom activities. Suitable quiet areas may include: the library/book corner, computer or play area. This will depend on the available classroom resources.

Time on the computer should be limited and should not be used as a substitute for interaction.

Newcomer children may find time on the computer calming.

Resources

Handy references

Help symbols

You may wish to prepare an emergency set of symbols for the new child to use in the first weeks of arriving into the class. Children can use these cards to indicate their basic needs without having to express them in English.

Toilet

I feel sick

I feel unhappy

A green circle to say 'I understand' and, on the back, a red circle to say 'I don't understand'.

Instruction words

Newcomer children find it easier to understand instructions if they are supported with pictures and gestures. It is a good idea to display pictures on the wall and refer to these when you give instructions to the newcomer child.

	Listen
	Look
	Sit down
	Talk quietly

If reinforcement is required, send this sheet home or make a mini-book with individual A5 instruction cards. Parents can talk about these in the home language and maybe translate.

Multicultural and multilingual resources

Resources from other cultures and languages help all children to develop their own knowledge of the world. Their display in the pre-school setting reinforces the message that diversity is valued.

Make a chart with the word 'Welcome' in different languages, and if a new child arrives whose home language is not represented, add this immediately.

You may wish to add pictures of children from different cultural backgrounds. See the list of websites on page 87 for suppliers of multi-cultural resources.

Dual language storybooks are an excellent way to celebrate other languages and involve newcomer parents in their child's education. Suppliers for dual language resources are listed on page 87.

EARLY DAYS

Introduction

The supportive and inclusive pre-school setting.

The environment should be inviting, safe and comfortable so that children feel confident to make friends and develop all their capabilities.

“It is important that young children are helped to understand that we see the world in many different ways depending on our culture, social and religious viewpoints. Staff in a setting should acknowledge and respect the culture, beliefs and lifestyles of the families of all the children. When planning, include activities and resources that encourage respect for diversity, including diversity within our own society.”¹

“Children should have opportunities to explore situations, express feelings in a way that is not gender specific and challenge stereotypes.”¹

- Do – Encourage and praise all attempts at communication, regardless of accuracy
- Do – Give the children time to settle and observe what they can do
- Do – Make sure children understand what is expected: use the same rewards and sanctions for all

Don't

- Don't – Panic! Many children remain silent for six months or more. Listening comes first.
- Don't – Insist on parents using English at home. Supporting their child's first language development will help with learning English
- Don't – Confuse language difficulties with learning difficulties. Place the children with good language role models.
- Don't – Put the child on the computer for long periods of time

Managing behaviour

Rules and routines

Rules and routines provide clarity and security in pre-school. However, they need to be explained, modelled, constantly rehearsed and encouraged. It is important that children and parents understand:

- What happens each day and when
- How to access books, toys, materials, computers and other resources
- Where to hang up coats, retrieve lunch boxes and so on
- How to behave during specific activities such as snack time or story time
- How to gain an adult's attention if appropriate, on arrival, during play and other routines of the day

Classroom visuals

Classroom labels can help children to access resources quickly. These should be pointed out to newly arrived children during a classroom tour.

Pictorial cues, or photographs of children carrying out everyday activities as instructed, are very useful in reinforcing classroom and school rules. These may be placed on the wall or made into a book and sent home for discussion in the home language.

Refer regularly to the classroom visuals to reinforce routines.

Celebrate good behaviour in the classroom and around the pre-school.

A volume control symbol may be useful to indicate acceptable noise levels at different working times during the day!

*These approaches will help develop children's independent self help
skills.*

Intercultural awareness: social conventions

It is important to be aware of differences in values, attitudes and beliefs so that misunderstandings may be avoided.

Greetings

In some cultures people commonly greet each other with kisses. However, in other cultures people almost never touch each other and may find even a pat of approval unusual and upsetting. However, a warm, friendly yet relatively formal greeting from teachers, other staff and children can make a world of difference to newcomer pupils and parents.

Gestures

Non-verbal communication through use of the eyes, the hands and the body differs between cultures. Pointing at people is not acceptable in some cultures. The thumbs up sign may mean nothing or appear rude. Using the thumb and the forefinger to form a circle expressing OK is a very rude gesture in some Middle Eastern countries. It is important to be aware of body language and the signals it may give out.

Dress code

There are noticeable cultural differences in levels of formality, dress for boys and girls, use of cosmetics and so on. For example:

- Parents and children arriving from Asian countries may be used to more formal dress codes in pre-school settings
- Children from other cultures may find the idea of school uniform very strange
- Uniforms may cause difficulty for children for whom culture or faith require particular dress codes.

It is important to be aware of sensitivities in issues of dress.

Social interaction

Modes of social interaction can differ significantly across cultures. Members of some cultures may seem loud or boisterous to those of quieter cultures. It is customary in some cultures to wait for a pause in the conversation before speaking. Therefore, some children may appear unwilling to participate because they have not recognised an opportunity to speak.

Some newcomer children may not be used to group work and it is important to provide a safe environment for this.

In some cultures it is customary to offer an answer to a question only when asked by the teacher. Therefore, children may not volunteer answers even if they know the correct answer. Other children may not volunteer an answer unless they are certain that it is correct.

In many cultures, children must show great respect to older people, teachers and other adults. That respect may be demonstrated by avoiding eye contact with staff members which may seem disrespectful to us.

Rewards, punishment and expectations

Individual achievement, in some cultures, is less important than group success. Members of these cultures may respond poorly to individual incentives but may be motivated by group work and group goals.

In some educational systems corporal punishment is the norm.

Be aware that parental expectations may be based on different experiences and it is, therefore, most important that parents understand fully the expectations of the pre-school setting.

Punctuality and attendance

Attitudes to punctuality and attendance may vary greatly from one culture to another. We may have different rules about time, depending on the occasion. It is important to explain daily routines and times and the need for punctuality.

It is also advisable to explain the need to attend pre-school for the children to make progress and become fully involved.

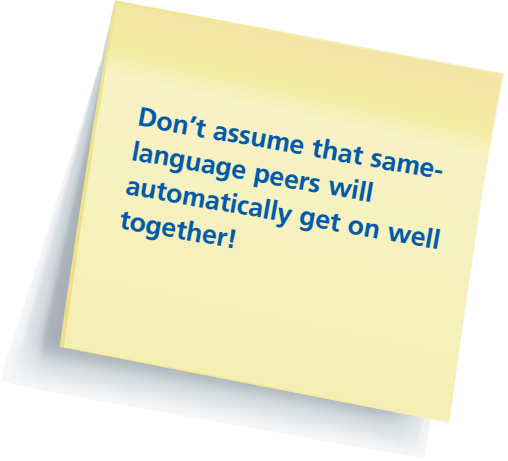

A sense of belonging

A sense of belonging for newcomer parents/carers is important. Encourage the pre-school staff to be open, adaptable and flexible. Newcomer parents/carers should be encouraged to visit the pre-school setting. Show parents / carers and children where to hang coats, leave bags, where the notice board is and so on.

Newcomer children may take longer to settle in. Here are some points to bear in mind:

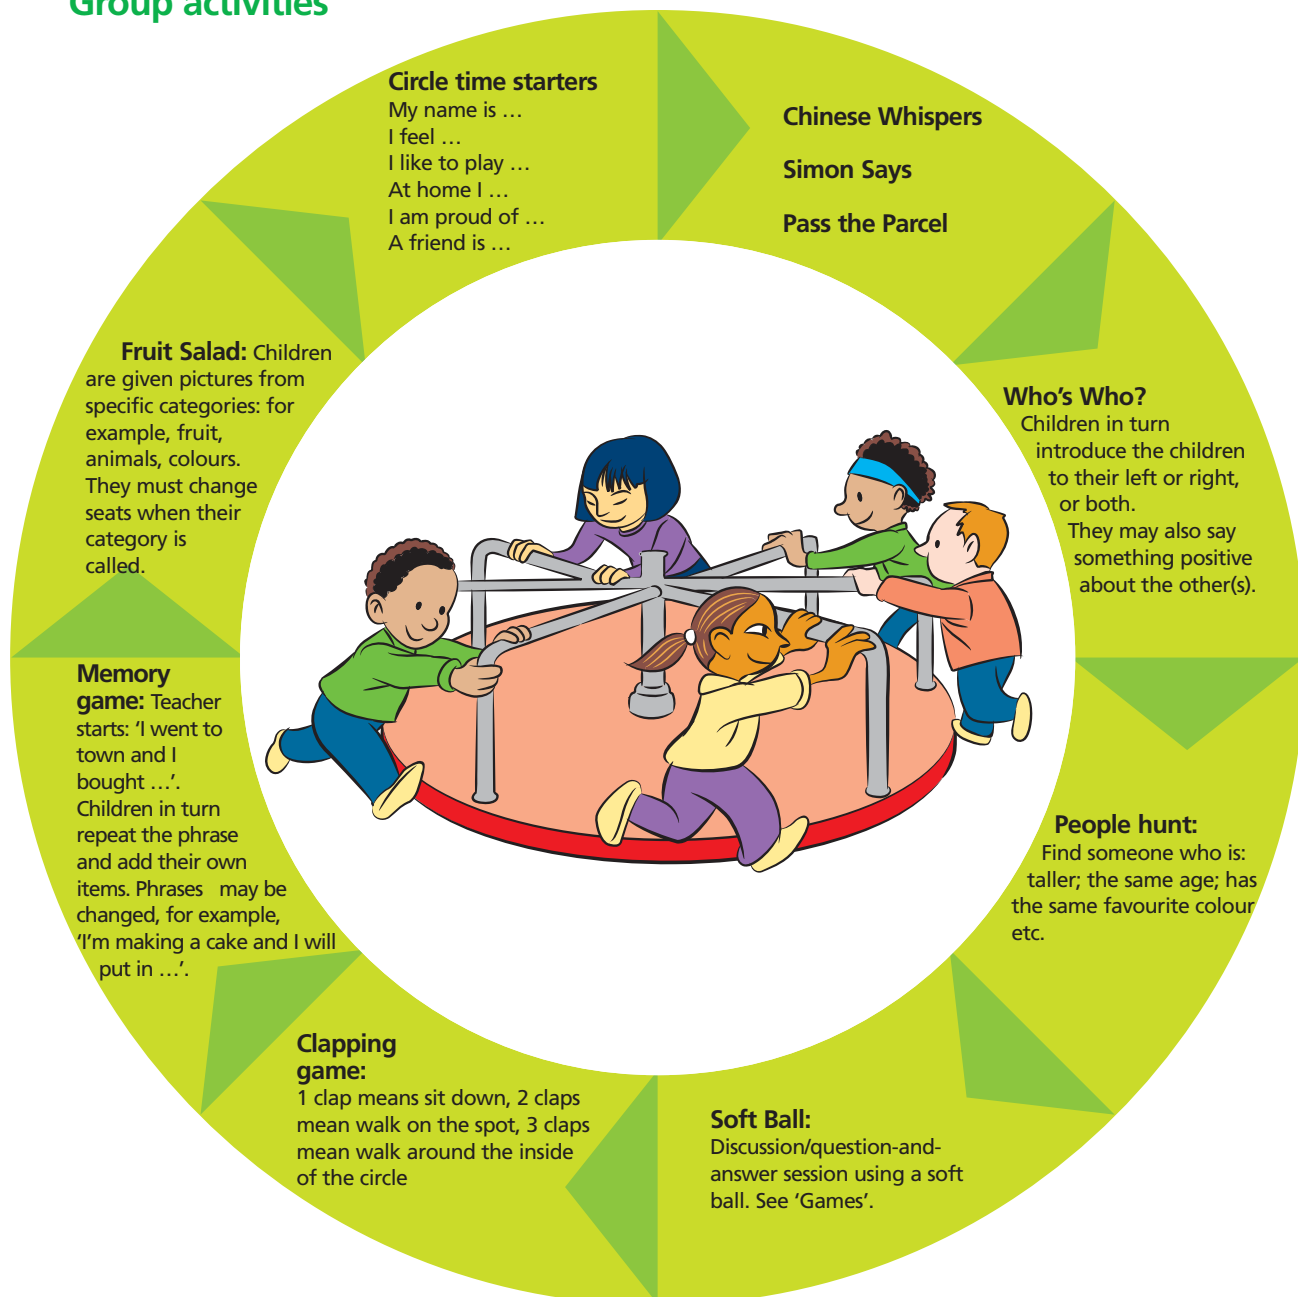

- Organise activities in a way that is inviting, engaging and simple
- Allow children time to adapt to routines of the classroom by modelling and fostering respect for others, staff, environment
- Use simple play activities, lots of basic sensory experiences for children
- Focus on simple routines
- Work on children's individual needs
- Use the early days to get to know the children through close observation
- During circle games encourage the children to hold hands to make connections with new children

The following pages provide some ideas on how to create a sense of belonging.

Don't assume that same-language peers will automatically get on well together!

Group activities

Suggested rules for group activities:

- One person speaks at a time
- Listen to others
- You may pass
- It's OK to make mistakes
- Encourage one another

Things to consider:

- It is a good idea to introduce the topics with a picture or object.
- Allow newcomer children to listen to other responses before it is their turn
- Encourage children to use actions with their answers
- Although a newcomer child may not want to speak, he/she may be able to participate non-verbally

Story area

The story area is a place where children come to look at books. They can access this area at any time of day. It is important to have a variety of story resources, topic related books, factual, fictional, magazines, listening centre, cds, big books, books from around the world, posters from around the world, map of the world, globe.

The story area needs to be quiet and comfortable with soft seating. It can be used as a settling or calming area.

Resources for the story area

- Books which reflect cultural diversity
- Paper
- Audio, computer or recording equipment
- Recording of familiar class songs, poems, prayers and favourite music
- Monolingual, bilingual and picture/photo dictionaries
- Samples of children's finished work
- Post-its and labels
- Multilingual resources
- Magazines and catalogues to cut up
- Weather chart
- Birthday chart
- Puppets

Songs

Songs introduce children naturally to accent, intonation and the rhythm of language. They may also be used to introduce vocabulary and structures.

Songs help children to remember words and structures because they are usually repetitive. Children generally enjoy participating and performing songs, and can accompany songs with actions.

It is important to draw children's attention to the cultural context of songs. Many songs are based on a historical event, or what children typically did in the past, or the experiences of children in everyday life.

It can be useful to use pictures or flashcards to illustrate meaning.

Some ideas for using songs include the following :

- The adult distributes flashcards. When the word associated with the picture occurs in the song, the child holding that card must show it
- Children listen and add/change a word or verse
- Children listen and accompany by miming or clapping
- Children listen to a verse of a song and draw a picture to illustrate it
- The adult uses a well-known tune and makes up a song to teach particular vocabulary
- Many children (and staff) prefer to chant. Use chant to practise key words and structures, particularly if you are not musically gifted!
- Children may substitute a word or phrase in a song and create their own song
- Children simply listen for pleasure

Storytelling

Children of all ages enjoy a good story. Storytelling is an important aid to language development. For newcomer children, hearing a story read aloud provides experience of a good model of pronunciation and intonation. Children should be encouraged to listen actively and to participate in the story, for example to chorus key words or phrases. They may mime the actions or dramatise the story.

Stories that work:

- Traditional and familiar stories, e.g. Little Red Riding Hood
- Stories linked with a theme, e.g. Dear Zoo
- Simple, repetitive stories created or adapted by the staff
- Variety of book styles, lift and flap, picture dictionaries, big books and flannel board stories.

Telling the story:

The adult is a very important medium in making the story accessible to all through use of gesture, facial expression, and voice changes which encourage children's involvement.

The adult may choose

- To enter straight into the story using gestures and pictures to convey meaning, then consolidate the key language in follow up activities, games, art, drama, music
- Lead into the story by pre-teaching key language using picture cards and games

Before telling the story, the adult should:

- Identify the key language to be delivered through the story
- Identify a range of activities based on using the key language areas which will prepare children to understand the story
- Identify a range of activities leading on from the story when the children are familiar with it
- Identify any additional materials required for the activity

Activities for extending stories

Hunt the thimble

One child leaves the room and the adult hides an object or picture of a character/animal from a story shared or read. The child returns and searches for the object/picture. When he/she approaches the hidden object/picture the children shout the key word(s). When he/she moves away from the hidden picture the class whisper the key word(s).

Simon says

This game can be used to reinforce vocabulary or pronunciation and intonation, e.g. Simon says 'pig' and the pupils make pig sounds.

Card games

Using either the images provided or their own drawings, children make cards which may be used to play games.

Gradual reveal

Using picture cards, the adult gradually reveals the picture on the card. Children guess who/what is in the picture.

Kim's Game

The adult displays a number of pictures or objects related to the story. The children close their eyes. The adult removes or covers one of them. The children guess what has been hidden. The teacher removes a second picture or object.

Stepping stones

The adult puts pictures of, for example, characters/animals on the floor to form stepping stones on an imaginary river. In teams, children have to move across the river by naming each character/animal correctly.

Hungry wolf (a version of 'Musical chairs')

The adult chooses one child as wolf and puts a mask on him/her. He/she leaves the room. The class says 'Here comes the wolf'. The wolf enters the room saying, 'I'm hungry, I'm hungry', and runs towards an empty chair. The child with no chair becomes the wolf.
(Possible variations – Hungry witch/Hungry giant/Hungry fox)

Story box/feely bag

Objects relating to the story are placed in a bag/box. The child puts their hands in bag, chooses something and talks about it before they take it out.

Sequencing

The adult distributes a different picture to each child. The children listen to the audio recording or the teacher narrating the story and, using the pictures, sequence themselves according to the storyline.

Dance

Children adopt the roles of animals/characters and respond to the story to accompany the adult as it is narrated.

Masks

Children make masks of the animals/characters by drawing their faces on paper plates using a range of art and collage materials. The adult narrates and children act out the story.

Puppets

The children use a puppet of an animal/character to introduce and act as narrator for the story or the children use puppets to retell the story.

Art and Design

Children make a wall display based on a scene or characters from a story.

Language games

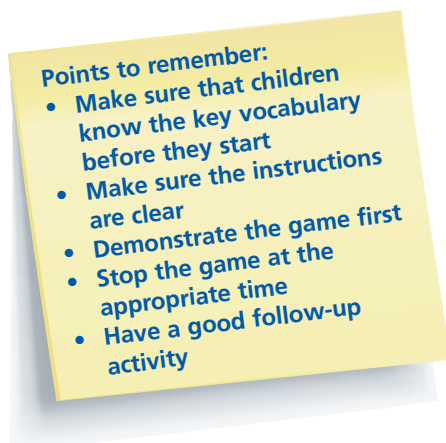

Learning language through games

Games provide the opportunity for meaningful interaction. Children should be encouraged to ask and answer questions, agree and disagree and practise a range of vocabulary.

Games can also be used across the curriculum to practise basic survival vocabulary and to familiarise pupils with rules and routines.

In addition games

- encourage the participation of all children
- create a non-threatening context for less confident children
- develop co-operative skills
- allow repetition without monotony
- encourage the use of language for an authentic purpose
- create a relaxed and 'fun' atmosphere

On the following pages there are suggestions for different types of games. While this section is included under Early Days, these games can obviously be used at any time.

The games fall into the following categories:

- Language skills
- Matching and sequencing
- Sorting activities
- Memory
- Routines

Games for developing language skills

Soft ball

The children sit in a circle. The adult throws a soft ball to a child and starts the conversation by saying a phrase or asking a question. The child repeats the phrase or answers the question and throws the ball back to the adult. Alternatively, the child could say another phrase or ask another question and throw the ball to another child. This activity can be used to get all children involved, to introduce a new child, to review recently learnt material, and so on.

Matching and sequencing activities

Pairs

Make pairs of picture relating to specific vocabulary.

Turn the cards face down on the table. Children take turns, to turn over two cards to try to find a matching pair.

Snap

Use the same cards as for pairs but play the game of 'Snap'. Players can count the number of cards they have at the end. This may be done in English, or children from other countries could teach English-speaking children to count in their languages.

Memory trainer

Children match associated pictures of objects e.g. umbrella and wellington boots go together.

Information gap

Gradual reveal

Put a picture or object related to a specific topic in a folder or bag. Reveal a little at a time. The children have to guess what it is. They can make predictions when they think they have some idea.

Hunt the thimble

One child leaves the room, possibly accompanied by an adult. The other children decide where to hide a picture or an object relating to a specific topic. The child and adult return to the room to look for the picture or object. The other children say the word for the picture or object in a very low voice if they are far from it and more loudly as they get nearer.

This game is excellent for oral language practice as the word is said repeatedly.

Sorting activities

When introducing sorting activities use concrete non-verbal cues. Children can sort a variety of objects by a common criterion e.g. colour, size or shape. Sorting activities take place throughout the day in all areas of the pre-school routine classroom. eg. tidy up time. Other activities include compare bears, spot the difference.

Memory activities

Kim's game

Put a number of pictures on the board or objects on a desk. Make sure that you name each object or picture for children with less English. Give the children 10 seconds to memorise them. Ask them to cover their eyes and then remove one. They have to guess what's missing. You can cover more than one picture.

What's in the bag? What's in the folder?

Put a number of objects in a bag or pictures in a folder, one by one. Remember to name them as you put them in. Then ask children if they can remember what you put in.

Chain games

Chain games are good for practising verbs, constructions, prepositions and word families. The teacher starts with a statement, children in turn repeat the statement and add one more item. Some suggestions:

I went to town and I bought

I'm making a cake and I'm putting in

Last night I saw a in the garden

Matching pairs

Cards showing matching symbols or pictures: children find the matching pair by turning over cards.

Reinforcing routines

Simon says

This is a good game to practise rules and routines. Children new to English will hear the instruction and observe the other children following it.

Follow the leader

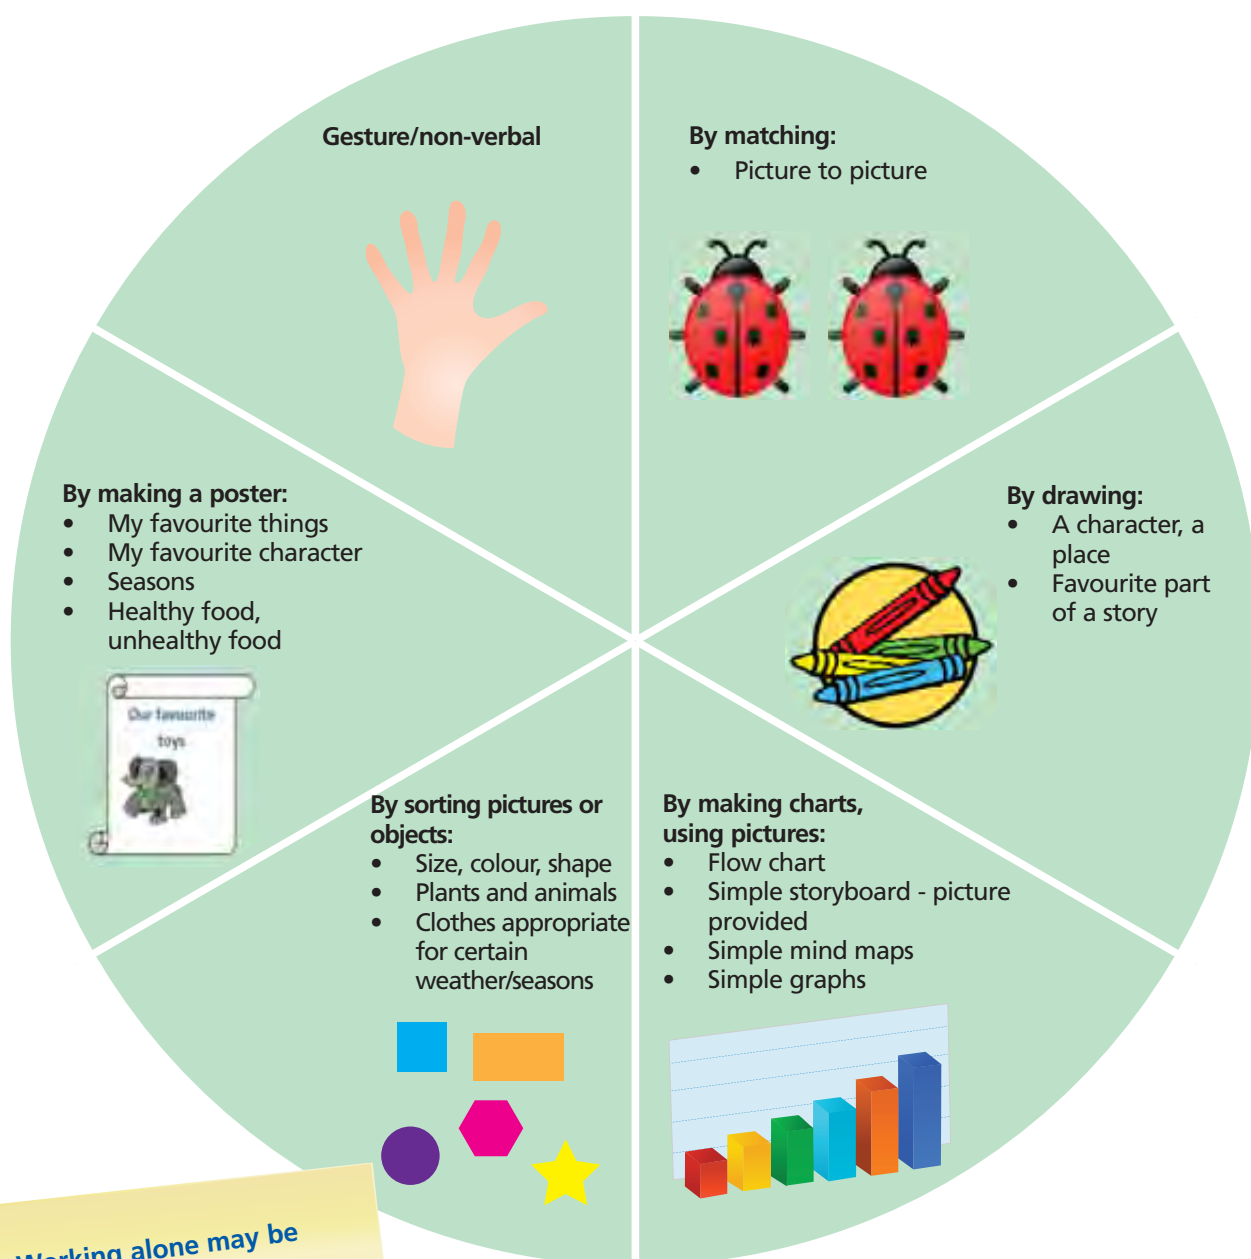

The adult or another child leads the line and the children must follow copying the actions. It is important to say the instruction as you do the action so that children new to English can learn to associate the instruction and the action. This is particularly appropriate in the outdoor environment.

Kim's game, Hunt the thimble, Pairs, Snap

Pictures relating to rules and routines can be used for Kim's game, Hunt the thimble, Pairs and Snap. These help familiarise children with rules and routines.

Demonstrating understanding

In their early days in pre-school, children with little English will have limited capacity to communicate orally, but they may well understand some of the interaction. It is important to find ways to allow them to demonstrate their understanding, other than by speaking. This can be observed by watching or engaging with children as they play. The activities below suggest how this might be done.

Working alone may be intimidating for a new child. Working with a partner allows opportunities to use specific language and to check understanding.

Communication with home

Maintaining good communication with home is vital, but this may be difficult when there is a language barrier. The following suggestions can make communication a little easier.

Explaining routines

Some routines are culture-specific and may be misunderstood. It is important to explain these by:

- Talking through the rules and expectations. You may prefer to present this as a mini-book, using photographs of children working in typical ways.

- Showing parents/carers how they can help their child by using their home language
- Walking the parents/carers around the pre-school, showing them how you manage rewards and behaviour, celebrate childrens' successes, use notice boards, organise routines
- Explaining trips and educational visits by showing visual letters and the calendar for the year

Visual letters

You may find it helpful to use visual letters when communicating with newcomer parents/carers. It is important that these should not be seen as patronising; they are intended to meet a very critical need on the part of the parents/carers as well as the school. Therefore, it should be explained to parents that these letters are used to help everybody, before one is sent home for the first time.

The best way of sending a visual letter is to photocopy it onto the back of the original letter so that the parent receives both versions.

When visual letters have been prepared for different purposes, it is a good idea to put a master copy into a shared folder, or keep a file centrally at the school office. Then the letters will be readily available for different purposes throughout the school year.

Typical information includes:

Book fair
Nurse
Sports day
Optician / Eye test
School trips
Dentist

Holidays and closures
Parent meeting with an interpreter
Concert
Permission for photo
Religious service

Newsletters

The newsletter is an important means of communication for all parents. It may be necessary to adapt newsletters to ensure that they are clear for newcomer parents. Consider the following:

- Reduce the amount of information on the page
- Use clear and simple English
- Include visuals where possible
- Avoid jargon

You may wish to consider sending home some information on key language. It is important to explain to parents how to use this information.

Samples and templates may be found on the CD.

Initial observations

The silent (non-verbal) period.

For some children, immersion in a new language causes them to become 'silent'. This well-researched response may last for a relatively short time but may also persist for many months. Research suggests that the younger the child, the longer the silent period may endure. A non-verbal response does not signal that a child has special learning needs. When the child begins to speak the teacher will be able to identify learning that has taken place weeks, or even months, previously.

This checklist allows the teacher to monitor a child's responses in the absence of spoken communication. If the child is demonstrating some of these responses and actions, even if they are only occasionally apparent, it is important not to intervene but to allow the child to emerge from the silent period when he/she is ready.

Checklist for observing progress during the silent period

MOVING ON

Moving On

Introduction

When newly arrived children feel safe and secure in their new environment, it is time to consider support for language development and curriculum access.

What does effective support include?

- A knowledge of the skills involved in language learning and how to develop these
- An awareness of the stages of language development
- Planning for inclusion: curriculum access for all

Language skills

The four skills of language learning are:

- listening
- talking
- reading
- writing

Oracy precedes reading and writing

The language skills are all inter-related and cannot be developed in isolation. It is likely, however, that they will not all develop at the same rate. Staff need to consider each language skill and how it may be developed. In the pre-school context the emphasis is on oracy.

Points to think about

Listening

Children in the early stages will understand much more than they can say, so non-verbal responses are very important. The more opportunities provided to hear the language, the better. Each opportunity that a child has to hear English spoken in the classroom is also an opportunity to acquire new language and absorb the sounds and patterns used.

Speaking

In order to use language effectively and in meaningful interaction, newcomer children will use staff, other children and adults as models for their own oracy development. Planned oral activities in the classroom are of particular importance.

If a child has not heard certain sounds within the first few years of learning to speak, he/she may find it extremely difficult to hear or reproduce these sounds when taught at a later stage. In fact, he/she may never be able to reproduce these sounds accurately.

Early Reading

An important part of language development is a love of stories and books. Children should be helped to understand that books can be a source of fun and enjoyment and also provide information and help answer questions. Opportunities should be provided for children to listen to a range of interesting and exciting stories and rhymes, and to have access to a great variety of books and print within their learning environment which enables them to view books as a natural part of play. With adult support children can become aware that the printed word has meaning and that pictures can help us to understand that meaning.

Early Writing

Children need to be encouraged to use a variety of writing tools so that they can share ideas and thoughts through drawing, mark making and early forms of writing.

Opportunities need to be available for children to observe adults writing and to enjoy experimenting with their own mark-making or emergent writing.

Developing the literacy skills of newcomer children

Developing world knowledge

- Make use of nursery rhyme and fairy tale books, audio recordings and software
- Provide opportunity for children to tell their personal or family news. Encourage children to bring a prop (book, toy, photo) to support speaking

Developing basic vocabulary

- Plan authentic opportunities for language development; make, do, cook, visit and so on
- Use rhyme and repetition in games, songs and poems to help memory development
- Retell stories with puppets or masks
- Link words, actions and stories to the home language when possible

Listening for individual sounds

- Demonstrate how to pronounce a difficult sound
- Play 'hunt the thimble' to focus on specific sound
- Sing and say rhymes and songs every day

Extending home language early literacy skills

- Provide dual language books
- Encourage parents to continue literacy development in the home language e.g. storytelling and using the library
- Send home picture books
- Encourage to use the a book club/lending library

Developing early reading

Model how to read, use tone, intonation

- Start with words in context: environmental print, e.g. class labels, displays
- Act as a scribe to describe child's picture or painting
- Set the scene by providing information about the context/subject, e.g. using pictures, non-fiction texts
- Children may sequence picture cues
- Encourage child to observe as you label work
- Give newcomer child their own symbol e.g. to identify coat hook
- Picture walking
- Encourage child to developing an interest, understanding and respect for books
- Ensure a variety of reading material
- Use visual media

Text orientation

- Model text orientation
- Book handling skills
- Display different texts, e.g. Arabic, Chinese, Russian

Sound recognition

- Identify environmental sounds through listening lotto
- Clap syllables of your name
- Discuss rhyme and offer opportunities to explore rhyme

Developing early writing

- Have a variety of writing material e.g. crayons, pencils, wipe board, chalk boards, paint brushes
- Develop, balance, gross, fine motor skills e.g. using tweezer/tongs, play dough activities, peg boards, threading, painting, finger painting and outdoor play
- Encourage writing in the dramatic play area eg. clipboards in the hospital, taking orders in the restaurant, appointment book in the hairdressers, writing letters in the post office

Developing cultural knowledge

- Discuss local life
- Be aware of cultural references and idiomatic language
- Encourage children to make contributions from their own cultural experience to enrich classroom activities and projects

Home language maintenance

- Allow child to speak in his or her own language. You may not be able to understand it but it gives children the opportunity to express and demonstrate their identities
- Encourage parents to read to their children in the home language

Listening

Difficulties encountered when listening and suggested activities to help.

Difficulties

Distinguishing sounds

Following instructions

Short concentration span

Difficulty following unfamiliar topics or stories

Children find it difficult to hear sounds that do not exist in their first language and will need extra practice and time with these.

Suggestions

- Animal sound games, Old McDonald
- Musical instrument games
- Recording and age appropriate software
- Sound bingo for rhyming, practising vocabulary
- Sorting objects or pictures according to sound
- Listen and identify the correct picture
- Identify the odd one out

- Use musical cues for classroom transitions
- Support instructions with gestures or pictures
- Traffic light games, stop and go signs
- Give one instruction at a time
- Ask another child to clarify
- Simon says

- Give child a picture of a character or object in the story. Each time they hear or see the character or object, they hold up the picture
- Give children colour cards. When they hear or see something that colour, they raise the card; ask them to explain
- Keep child involved by inviting, at intervals, someone to show something, 'Show me the ...'
- Involve children in repetition, accompanied by actions
- Listen to a story and add actions

It is a good idea to record some stories, rhymes, songs and listening activities, so that the children can practise independently.

Talking

Difficulties encountered when speaking and suggested activities to help

Difficulties

Rhythm and intonation

Suggestions

- Use familiar songs, rhymes and chants
- Encourage groups to perform and dramatise whole or parts of familiar rhymes and chants
- Encourage groups to make up their own rhymes and chants and present to class
- Encourage children to clap or click in rhythm, for example to practise syllable stress
- Provide recordings with familiar songs, rhymes
- Choral speaking

Pronunciation

- Provide opportunities for activities such as sound lotto, sorting games, hunt the thimble, Chinese whispers, to give pupils time to try out and play with new sounds
- Show children how to articulate difficult sounds
- Praise all attempts at new sounds
- Correct pronunciation by repeating the correct sound and asking the children to do so, from time to time. However, over-correcting and interrupting can discourage children
- Play games such as 'I hear with my little ear'.

Sentence structure and grammatical mistakes

- Provide opportunities for children to hear sentences modelled correctly
- Correct mistakes by repeating the correct structure, sometimes asking the children to repeat, for example: 'Me go toilet?', 'Oh, you would like to go to the toilet?' Be careful not to over correct.

Adjusting speech to appropriate register: formal/informal, adults/peers

- Provide opportunities to hear speech modelled for specific purposes: the teacher, other children, recordings
- Demonstrate correct speech by repeating phrases using correct tone and volume
- Provide frameworks to scaffold talk
- Model how to greet visitors to the nursery
- Model basic social communication

It can be very difficult to produce sounds that do not exist in the home language, for example 'th' or the glottal stop.

Talking (continued)

Reluctance to speak/keeping only to familiar topics

- Ask an adult to practise key words and phrases with the newcomer children in advance of new topics by:
 - talking about a picture or picture book
 - practising a specific set of words or phrases
 - helping with illustration or translation of new words
- Encourage repetition
- Circle time/circle games
- Accept and praise all attempts to speak
- Provide puppets or masks
- Provide opportunities to hear phrases modelled many times before asking the child to contribute. For example, ask the same question of a number of children before asking those with less English
- Provide opportunities for children to work in small groups and pairs. They may feel more confident in this setting and have more opportunity to talk and question
- Provide opportunities for language games
- Allow time for children to talk about topics of interest: favourite group, sport, toy ...
- Use mini-books as a stimulus for talk with the teacher, another adult or peer
- Record own mini-books, news or stories
- Provide sentence starters to scaffold talk

Sequencing thoughts

- Chain games: 'I went to town and I bought ...'
'On my way to school I saw ...'
- Use storyboards, slide-shows and flowcharts to help children recall or sequence ideas

It is not unusual for newcomer children not to speak for some time. This period could last for one to three terms and is known as the 'Silent Period'. If the child does not wish to speak, that is OK. They will still listen and absorb a lot of English and speak when they are ready.

Sample frameworks for modelling talk

You may wish to use frameworks such as these to model language structures.

Planning for language learning in pre-school

This section is designed to help you adapt your planning to make the pre-school curriculum accessible to all children.

Communication, dialogue and social interaction are the principal tools for language development in a pre-school setting. The conversations between adult and child are as important as the planned play activities. We must create opportunities for children to work in small groups and independently and provide environments which are cognitively and linguistically stimulating. Encourage children to ask questions, recall and reformulate information.

The diagram below illustrates points to bear in mind when planning for all children, including those with limited English to including newcomer children.

*Why not use the template referred to on page 53 to communicate key language to parents?

Stages of Second language development: benchmarks for listening & speaking

The Common European Framework of Reference

The Common European Framework of Reference is a set of global benchmarks for language proficiency. It distinguishes five communicative skills: listening, reading, spoken interaction and writing. There are six levels of proficiency within each skill ranging from A1 level (breakthrough) to C2 level (mastery)

The benchmarks below describe the first two levels of proficiency for listening and speaking. These are widely used in primary school. However, you may also find these useful when planning for and monitoring language learning.

UNDERSTANDING		A1 BREAKTHROUGH	A2 WAYSTAGE
	Listening	<ul style="list-style-type: none">• Can recognize and understand basic words and phrases concerning him/herself, family and school.• Can understand simple questions and instructions when teachers and other pupils speak very slowly and clearly.	<ul style="list-style-type: none">• Can recognize and understand frequently used words relating to him/herself and family, classroom activities and routines, school instructions and procedures, friends and play.• Can understand a routine instruction given outside school (e.g. by a traffic warden).• Can understand what is said in a familiar context such as buying something in a shop (e.g. price).• Can follow at a general level topics covered in the mainstream class provided key concepts and vocabulary have been studied in advance and there is appropriate visual support.• Can follow and understand a story if it is read slowly and clearly with visual support such as facial expression, gesture and pictures.

Monitoring and assessing progress

This section looks at ongoing assessment and considers how staff may assess children's progress and help them to assess their own learning. It also suggests ways of communicating progress to parents.

Accurate assessment of a child's proficiency is unlikely in the early days for the following reasons:

- The child may be suffering from 'shock' or trauma and may be unable to communicate
- The child may have been told by parents/carers not to give information
- A 'Silent Period' often occurs when children are immersed in a new language and does not necessarily indicate a learning difficulty. Emphasising the situation through assessment may worsen the situation. See page 54.

The abilities of newcomer children should be viewed in relation to the peer group. It is important to identify what skills, other than language proficiency, the child may need to learn, or, conversely, may have gained ahead of the peer group.

Observation

Pre-school staff may find the following observation samples useful in assessing a child's progress. The answers to the questions on these sheets will help identify on-going areas of priority for the children. This information would be useful at intervals throughout the year.

The forms are merely to provide guidance.

You may still find the observation sheet for the silent period useful.

Is the child	YES	NO	SOMETIMES
Using his/her mother tongue with staff/peers despite their inability to understand.
Making eye contact with staff.
Watching other children closely.
Imitating other children's actions.
Using facial expressions to communicate feelings.
Bringing particular objects, books, etc. to staff.
Responding to communication through gesture/mime by members of staff or other children.
Seeking attention by interacting with other children or teacher (e.g. handing them objects).
Requesting help by making signs, pointing, etc.
Indicating dislike of an object or activity.
Protesting by making sounds or appearing aggressive.
Imitating non-verbal behaviour of other children.
Experimenting with sounds of English.
Repeating and rehearsing words or phrases.
Following verbal instructions.

Remember that requests by children for clarification or help may be non-verbal.

Communication with parents/carers

- Arranging parent meetings
- Communicating progress

It is most important to achieve a means of communicating with newcomer parents/carers, as they may feel excluded from their child's education due to their own lack of proficiency in English.

Points to remember for parent-teacher meetings:

- Parent meetings may not be a feature of some education systems and parents may feel that something is wrong if they are invited to the pre-school. It is important to explain the purpose and importance of such meetings during the initial meeting with parents.
- It may be difficult for some parents to attend meetings due to working patterns. Is it possible to arrange alternative meeting times?
- Some parents do not feel that they could cope with a meeting. If it is possible to arrange for interpreters to be available, it is important to communicate this at the initial meeting with parents.
- Do not ask another child to interpret.
- Newcomer parents/carers may not be familiar with the routines of parent-teacher meetings, such as where to go, where to wait and so on. Make sure that there is a helper to smooth the way.
- Create a welcoming environment in the room and remember that the parent/carer will be depending on visual cues from the staff member.
- Set aside additional time for interpreting and extra explanations. Remember that newcomer parents are new to the education system and may not be aware of some of the most basic routines and procedures. Consider whether there is anything that you may need to explain.
- Have some examples of the child's work, such as photos of their play, painting, drawing or models they have made and books or resources that are used.

Encourage parents/carers to:

- use their home language with their children
- talk to their children about pre-school. In doing so, parents/carers can keep contact with what is happening in pre-school and understand what is important to their child
- contact the pre-school if there are any concerns
- talk to their children about what they are learning using the newsletter. In doing so parents/carers can keep contact with what is happening in pre-school and understand what is important to their child.

Celebrating diversity

Intercultural day

Preparation: Some suggestions

- Plan a day late in the year which will involve children, staff and parents.
- Notify parents/carers of this event well in advance (get brief notes translated, if possible) and request that they support children in identifying objects from home, assembling national costumes, creating foods etc., that are traditional or specific to different cultures (including Irish cultural /historical items).
- Use items children have created during play as contributions for the day: sing songs in different languages, create art work for exhibition, demonstrate how to put on a traditional garment or headgear, practise traditional dances.

On the day ...

- Make it a whole day celebration.
- Ensure that the programme allows for everybody to circulate and experience all the events.
- Assign a parent/carer to help with appropriate activities.
- The objective is for each child to participate in as many activities as possible.

A template to record the child's participation in the day is included on the CD

Making little people

What you need:

A 'front' and 'back' picture of each child.

Empty rolls (e.g. from kitchen towels) or empty milk/juice cartons which have been well washed.

Glue

Method:

- Using a digital camera, take front and back photographs of each child.
- Children stick their own photos to the front and back of the tube/carton to make a 'little person'.
- Children put their 'little people' together.
- Teacher asks questions such as: 'How many children have dark/blonde hair?', 'How many children have straight/curly hair?', 'Can you see anything that we all have?' (2 eyes, 1 nose, 2 hands, 2 feet.)
- Teacher asks questions like 'What makes Tiago sad?', 'What makes Magda happy?' and children reply through their own 'little people.'
- 'Little people' can be used to explore feelings and worries or to explain something that has happened.

Travelling teddy bear

You may wish to introduce a travelling teddy bear or other character to your class. The children may take him home or on holidays, take photographs and talk about these when they return to pre-school. Adults within the pre-school setting may also wish to take the teddy bear on their travels!

The teddy bear's appearance in unfamiliar places and environments helps children relate to them. Seeing their own bear in the classroom and then seeing pictures of his adventures in faraway places helps children bridge the gap between the immediate, familiar environment and unfamiliar environments. It also encourages exploration, observation, problem solving, prediction, thinking and discussion.

Introduction

It is important to consider planning for inclusion of all children. This section aims to guide pre-schools through the planning process.

Planning for inclusion entails

- auditing current practice
- action planning for priority areas of development
- staff development

Planning for inclusion

Steps in the process

Look at the school/pre-school development plan. Does it need an inclusion focus?

Where are we now? Consider an audit of provision and practice

Prioritise 1-2 areas for more immediate development

Draw up an action plan with clear and simple goals

Implement the action plan and keep an eye on progress

Evaluate the effectiveness of the action plan and consider the next steps

NOTES

Terminology

There are many acronyms used to refer to the teaching of English in different contexts and for different purposes.

ESL	English as a Second Language	English is a second language when the English language replaces the first or home language for important or critical aspects of daily life, such as education or work. Learners are generally learning English in order to access daily communication needs in an English-speaking environment. This does not necessarily imply that the learner knows only one other language, it is the use to which the language is put that accords it the 'second' place.
EAL	English as an Additional Language	This term is used to refer to learners who may have more than one other language. English is therefore an additional language and may be a third, fourth etc. language. Typically learners begin with zero or little English.
EFL	English as a Foreign Language	This term refers to learners who are learning English as a foreign language, comparable with the foreign languages curricula in school. In general, learners of English as a foreign language return to their own country of origin and may continue to use English in that country for educational or work purposes.
ESOL	English for Speakers of Other Languages	This is a broad term, generally used to refer to classes for learners of English in an English-speaking country. It may include English as a Foreign Language and English as a Second Language. It is often used to describe classes held for adult learners.
TEFL	Teaching English as a Foreign Language	This term refers to teachers who are teaching English either in a country where English is not the first language or in language schools offering courses to children and adults.
TESOL	Teaching English to Speakers of Other Languages	This term refers to teachers who are teaching English to speakers of other languages in an English speaking country. Learners may be either foreign language or second language learners.
IDS	Inclusion and Diversity Service	This term refers to the advisory and support services for schools (NI). The support focuses on the whole pupil and includes provision for pastoral, language and curriculum needs.
